APPENDIX

1. The federal child benefit amounts are the following amounts which represent the maximum amounts of the National Child Benefit Supplement as calculated by the Government of Canada:
   (a) $192 per month for the first dependent child;
   (b) $170 per month for the second dependent child; and
   (c) $162 per month for each remaining dependent child.

2. The child supplement allowance is the difference between the maximum amount of the National Child Benefit Supplement as calculated by the Government of Canada and as identified in Section 1 of this Appendix and the amount of the National Child Benefit Supplement that the household would have been eligible to receive for the dependent children, but for the termination of the benefit, as calculated by the Government of Canada.

3. A child supplement allowance may be provided when the amount of the National Child Benefit Supplement that the household would have been eligible to receive for the dependent children, but for the termination of the benefit, as calculated by the Government of Canada, is less than the maximum amount of the National Child Benefit Supplement as calculated by the Government of Canada and as identified in Section 1 of this Appendix.
